1. Define what method you are using to reach speeds higher than typically available through DSL as described in the map data:
    a. Do you deploy remote DSLAMs with fiber feeds? Windstream Response: Yes. Fiber Fed DSLAMs are deployed throughout our network. If not, what is the average distance from a customer to the DSLAM on copper? Not Applicable
    b. Do you bond copper pairs? Windstream Response: Yes, we do bond copper pairs in providing service.
    c. How are you overcoming the distance limitations in your vendor's DSL technology? - Windstream is not overcoming the distance limitations of its vendor's DSL technology. However, we work to optimize the available technologies for optimum speeds for end users. Currently, Windstream deploys VDSL2 technology in many areas throughout IA. This technology, combined with bonding pairs and vectoring, allows theoretical download speeds greater than 300Mbps. Windstream limits our current product offering to a maximum of 300Mbps via copper to provide the highest chance of supporting the speeds.

2. Provide the formula or calculation used to calculate the provided speed. – Based on vendor and Windsteam lab testing, we have created a Rate vs. Reach table, which is used as part of our qualification tool, to determine the likely speed that the end user should be able to obtain based on the technology deployed and the copper distance from the DSLAM to their location.

3. Indicate the technology type at the address location. If the technology type is in fact DSL, indicate which type of DSL you are providing. Included on Spreadsheet in the Technology Type Column

4. Confirm that the speeds indicated on Broadband Map v5 for said locations are correct, and that Windstream can facilitate speeds consistent with the map data for that location using the specified DSL technology type indicated in the Notice Form. In the alternative, enter the actual download and upload speeds able to be facilitated at that address location. We have listed the highest available speed tier for sale for the location.

Kinetic's Internal Qualification Process

Kinetic utilizes a process known as "UQUAL" in order to determine the maximum download and upload speed that a location should be capable of receiving from Kinetic broadband service. At its essence, the process identifies the latitude and longitude of a given location and uses those coordinates to determine the proximity of the location to existing Kinetic infrastructure. That proximity is then used to determine the maximum level of service that the location should be capable of receiving.

The exact mechanism in which UQUAL operates varies by technology type:

Fiber: When a fiber build is designed, Kinetic planning engineers create polygons encompassing all of the addresses that the build is intended to serve. Upon completion of the build, all locations within the polygon qualify for fiber services delivering a minimum of 1 Gbps symmetrical download and upload. UQUAL identifies whether or not the location falls within a completed polygon and assigns it the appropriate 1G qualification to the location if so.

Cable: UQUAL references the location's address against a specific list of addresses that fall within Kinetic's cable design areas and assigns a cable qualification if a match is found. These addresses are qualified for download speeds of 1 Gbps, although Kinetic cable service does not offer symmetrical download and upload speeds.

Copper/DSL: To determine qualification of a location via DSL service, UQUAL uses the location's coordinates to calculate the distance from the location along the available copper path to the nearest serving terminal. This distance is known as the loop length. Qualification is then calculated based upon what the serving device is capable of providing over that loop length.

Fixed Wireless: UQUAL plots the location onto a propagation map that indicates the coverage of Kinetic's fixed wireless network. If the location is determined to be within line of sight and serving range of a Kinetic tower, UQUAL translate the signal strength indicated by the propagation map into a qualification for the location.

It is possible that a location may qualify for service via multiple technology types. In this event, UQUAL will assign the technology type offering the greatest speed.
